

Schools, Readers and Writers in Medieval Bristol

New ALHA Publication

Bristol was one of England's leading centres of education and literary culture by the end of the Middle Ages, with schools at several levels. Books were owned and used by clergy, laymen and women, and the city had its own authors, producing works on topics as various as history, topography, civic affairs, alchemy, and poetry.

Nicholas Orme is emeritus professor of history, Exeter University, and the author of numerous studies of religious, social, and cultural history in medieval and early modern England, including Medieval Children (2001), Medieval Schools (2006), and ALHA No 23 The Kalendars.

The full price will be £3.50 (plus 65p for p & p).

But only £2.85 plus 65p posted to you for orders received before 15 September

Just send the order form below to W Evans, 5 Parrys Grove, Bristol BS9 1TT to arrive before 15 September 2018

I enclose a cheque for £

Please send me copies of Schools . . . in Medieval Bristol at £3.50 inc. UK postage

Name

Address

Town & Postcode